EXECUTIVE:

He is part of the executive government, laws and regulations made by the Legislature implements. The president is the executive head of the state such as the President and all the ministers and bureaucrats are the executive governor.

Executive functions:

- to implement government policies and laws made by legislative bodies put into practice

- the executive branch of government in the law-making process helps

- conducts relations with the executive states.

- The various types of treaties and agreements that execution.

- in all countries of the Supreme Commander of the armed forces of the country’s president, but he does not participate in any Yudhy.
Executive type:

1. Parliamentary Government - in countries with a parliamentary system of executive function is the name of the king or the president, but only nominal powers are. They formally work President of the Executive Council of Ministers, which is the actual name of the king or the government run. Example - UK, India, Canada and Japan

2. Chairman's government - presidential system, the president is the only real powers. Presidential system is working in countries where there are only advisory to the president, secretary or ministers. Only the president is responsible for the central administration Like the United States, Brazil, Peru, Costa Rica, etc.

3. The semi-presidential system - presidential, parliamentary and semi-presidential system is composed of a combination of both systems Russia, France and the system is working in Sri Lanka. The broad powers to the president is directly elected. He appoints the Prime Minister is taken by the Parliament.