...the water was quite calm in the middle, but having got safely across the river, Romi saw in his pocket for a little river raft. Clipping the straps of the river bag with his nose, he concentrated on keeping balance and getting the bicycle through. The water came up to his knees and the current would have been too strong for Teju to cross.

When they reached the shallows, Teju got down and helped Romi with the bicycle. Finally they reached the opposite bank and sank into the grass.

'We can rest now,' said Romi. 'But not all night—I've got some work to give to my father.'

He felt in his pockets and found that the pills, in their envelopes, were all soggy. 'Oh well, he has to take them with water anyway.'

They watched the fire as it continued to spread through the forest. The sky was a bright red, and the river reflected the color.

It is easier to lift something heavy using a lot of effort well in the middle. (Here) the water in the middle of the river moved at great speed.

Several elephants were crossing their way down the river. They were cooling themselves by spraying water with their trunks. The water flowed downstream and other animals were drinking.

Romi and Teju were sitting on the grass, other in the background. They had other very...
